

We open on a dark void, where a ray of light traces across the side silhouette of a mouse, subtly revealing its bold red design.

In a flash of red, the camera cuts in closer as Faker's signature is scrawled across the mouse.

We cut to the front of the mouse. As it rotates, the same ray of light captures the alluring ergonomic form of the Razer DeathAdder V3 Pro.

From a top-down view, red highlights race along the edges of the mouse to highlight its curves and angles.

The video suddenly glitches to a bold visual of a demon face against a red background, before transitioning to the face of Faker.

Following this, we see a quick series of extreme closeups of the mouse, as its full design is unveiled in dramatic fashion.

The camera zooms out to a full top-down view of the mouse—its bold red design contrasted by a black scroll wheel and side buttons. Across the rear of the mouse, we see the same demon face design in black. On the right mouse button, Faker's signature is inscribed in black.

The camera flashes to another scene, as we see Faker gripping the mouse. Our view shifts up to capture his intense and focused expression.

We cut to another angle to see Faker staring into the camera, hands clasped—the mouse resting before him, as the demon face looms menacingly behind him.

The camera zooms into his face, transitioning and ending on a shot of him holding the mouse up to the camera.

A red Razer logo appears.
